Once a beggar came to town, seeking hospitality. All the other citizens sent him away, but a poor man and his wife received him into their home. They had little food and wine, but they gave him all that they had. The woman, having filled his cup often, saw that the jar was still full of wine. Marvelling, she told her husband. They raised their hands and prayed, for they knew that the beggar must be a god. Destroying the town, the god saved the poor man and his wife because of their hospitality.
